

Warren Buffett – The Greatest Investor of All Time

Warren Buffett was born in 1930 in Omaha, Nebraska. From an early age, he was fascinated by numbers and business. As a boy, he delivered newspapers and sold small items to earn money, always saving what he made. These habits taught him the importance of working hard, managing money wisely, and making smart decisions.

At age 11, Warren bought his first stock. He watched its price rise and fall, learning that investing takes patience and time. Later, he studied business at the University of Nebraska and then at Columbia University, where he met his famous teacher, Benjamin Graham. Graham introduced him to the idea of “value investing” — buying strong companies that cost less than they are really worth.

Warren followed this idea all his life. Instead of chasing quick profits, he focused on studying companies carefully and holding his investments for many years. In the 1960s, he purchased a small textile company called Berkshire Hathaway. Over time, he turned it into one of the most successful companies in the world. Through Berkshire Hathaway, he invested in big companies like Coca-Cola, Apple, and American Express because he believed they would stay strong for the long run.

Warren Buffett’s success comes from patience, discipline, and clear thinking. Even though he is one of the richest people on Earth, he lives a simple and modest life. He values honesty, curiosity, and learning more than luxury. Most importantly, Warren believes that real success means using your wealth to help others. To show this, he has pledged to give away most of his money to charity, inspiring people everywhere to use their success for good.
