

Cinderella - Fairy Tale

Cinderella

Once upon a time, there was a kind little girl named Cinderella. After her mother died, her father married a new wife. Cinderella's stepmother was cruel and made her do all the hardest and dirtiest work in the house. Her two stepsisters did no work at all. When Cinderella finished her chores, she sat tired and alone by the fireplace, covered in ashes. That is why everyone began to call her Cinderella. She slept on the floor near the fire, while her stepsisters slept in soft beds in beautiful rooms. Even though her life was very hard, Cinderella stayed kind and never complained.

One day, the prince announced a grand ball at the palace. All the young women in the kingdom were invited. The stepsisters were very excited and made Cinderella help them get ready. She cleaned their shoes and combed their hair. Secretly, Cinderella wished she could go to the ball too and dreamed of dancing with the prince. When the stepsisters and their mother left for the palace, Cinderella felt very sad and began to cry.

Suddenly, a kind woman appeared. She was Cinderella's fairy godmother. With a wave of her magic wand, she turned a pumpkin into a shining coach and mice into strong horses. She gave Cinderella a beautiful gown and a pair of glass slippers. Before Cinderella left, her fairy godmother warned her to come home before midnight, or the magic would disappear.

Cinderella rode to the palace in the shining coach. When she arrived, everyone stopped to look at her. The music paused, and the dancers stood still. No one knew who she was, but they could see she was kind and beautiful. The prince came to greet her and asked her to dance. Cinderella said yes, and they danced together again and again. Cinderella felt happier than she had ever felt before. The stepsisters were at the ball too, but they did not recognize Cinderella and felt jealous because the prince only danced with her.

As Cinderella danced, time passed quickly. Suddenly, she heard the clock begin to ring. She remembered the fairy godmother's warning and ran out of the palace as fast as she could. As she hurried down the stairs, one of her glass slippers slipped off her foot. Cinderella wanted to stop, but she could not. When the clock struck midnight, her gown turned back into her old clothes, and the coach became a pumpkin. Cinderella ran home and climbed into her small room. She was surprised to see that she still had one glass slipper.

The prince ran after Cinderella but could not find her. All he found was the glass slipper on the palace steps. He decided to find the girl whose foot fit the slipper. The next morning, he sent his helpers all over the kingdom. They tried the slipper on many feet, but it did not fit anyone.

At last, the helpers came to Cinderella's house. The stepsisters tried to squeeze their feet into the slipper, but it would not fit. Cinderella stepped forward quietly and asked to try. The slipper fit her perfectly. Then she showed the other glass slipper. Everyone was amazed, and the prince knew Cinderella was the girl from the ball.

Cinderella forgave her stepsisters for being unkind. She married the prince and moved to the palace. Cinderella's life was happy at last, and she never forgot to be kind. And Cinderella and the prince lived happily ever after.
